Setting measurable goals

In order to measure our own compliance with EHS, we must set quantifiable goals

Improving the EHS program

We endeavor to continuously improve our safety and environment and health program.

Accountability

All employees are EHS accountable to fellow employees, the environment, and to themselves. As a result, all EHS rules must be followed. All employees are required to report all unsafe circumstances, as well as possible health hazards, to their superiors. It is absolutely essential to understand why these rules must be followed

Manager tasks

All managers must openly communicate their EHS expectations as well as required resources needed for the safe performance of activities. In addition, EHS accomplishments should regularly be measured and documented.
